Propel your Career with a College Degree

As the number of jobs requiring a bachelor's degree continue to increase, so does the need to further one's education in order to maintain a competitive edge when seeking employment. Furthermore, according to the report "Education Pays: the Benefits of Higher Education for Individuals and Society," in 2008, full-time workers with a bachelor's degree earned nearly $21,000 more annually than high school graduates. That makes it more important now than ever before to achieve a college-level degree.

Employers Value a GCU Education

One of the main reasons employers value a GCU education is the direct and immediate applicability of the course curriculum. Students do not have to wait until they've completed their degree to start applying the skills and knowledge learned to their job. Students are continually asked to make a connection between what is learned, its relevance and its application to management and leadership roles. This means employers can reap the benefits of their employees' GCU degree sooner.

For those in the military who are interested in advancement, earning a bachelor's degree is essential. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, "requirements vary by branch of service, but enlisted personnel need at least a high school diploma or its equivalent while officers need a bachelor's or graduate degree."*

I am an Army nurse. When the first opportunity came to care for patients, I used the education I received through Grand Canyon University's nursing program to know what to do. They also adequately prepared us to take the nursing boards. ”
